

Those Calgary Obliterators of 1883 - 1890

Rick Parama

Target obliterators, were apparently made of rubber (manufactured by Canada Rubber of Montreal, using a master steel mould) and the handles of wood, by J. E. Ménard of Quebec, in 1880 and 1881. Later but undefined orders were made in 1888 and 1889 (Sessional Papers), which suggests that the POD was ordering these obliterators from 1880 to 1889; or they were made in large enough batches and held in stock and issued when an appropriate post office was opened. Target obliterators began to be used in Alberta in October 1883 (issued to Calgary and Fort McLeod for their opening on October 1st 1883); but were no longer issued to new post offices in Alberta from about 1887. The Calgary target obliterators wore out rather rapidly.

When the Calgary post office opened October 1st 1883, there was possibly only one clerk assigned to postal cancelling duties. The first postmaster, William B. Bannerman, may have been the 'postal clerk', but this does not seem likely. The post office was located in Bannerman's Flour and Feed Store which by 1885, also had a book and stationery section. It was likely a clerk of the store was assigned to do postal duty.

By August 1884, Calgary was issued a second date stamp. The first and second date stamps were used concurrently. The second dater shows that Calgary was becoming a busy office and also that probably there was sufficient postal volume to employ two clerks for postal duty. Both date stamps were recorded as re-cut by Pritchard

& Andrews in 1888; there were two states of each date stamp.

On May 15th 1885 G. C. King took over the Calgary post office. King was also a merchant and the post office was in his General Merchant store. It seems probable that King assigned postal duties to at least two clerks. Through the years the volume of mail continued to increase. The recorded yearly postal revenue for 1884 was $1200 and by 1892 had increased to nearly $10,000 yearly. The use of separate dumb obliterators at Calgary ended by mid-December 1890 however.

'Corks' are sometimes described as unofficial stamp obliterators not issued from the POD head office. In some sources the name 'cork' comes from the premise that some unofficial obliterators were made locally from the corks of bottles. Jarrett once said, the corks were taken from bottles of spirits "from which the spirits had fled". Whether or not this is true may never be proven, nor do we know for if the 'corks' were made from corks. As will be seen those found on mail from Calgary, the designs can take on many different forms, but generally are of grids of squares, pies or intaglio crosses, circles and horizontal lined grids. Some show evidence of being pliable; that is the impression varied from strike from strike, perhaps from the angle or force of the blow. I will just call them corks. Belanger has shown some "corks" were ordered by the POD, but it is not known if these POD ordered 'corks' were attributed to, or used at, Calgary.

The first Calgary 'corks' (non-targets) appeared by April 1884, so the 'event' apparently is not related to the changes in postmasters or clerks. There is evidence that there was more than one clerk in the 'cork' record. One 'cork' dated on March 28th 1888 is a sharp fresh strike. A completely different 'cork' in known used on the next day, on registered mail.

Why unofficial corks were needed at Calgary is a bit of a mystery. Their appearance seems to be related to the status of official obliterated which were certainly available but it would have taken several days to get a replacement from POD headquarters. Indeed it appears that the standard obliterated simply wore out necessitating the need for temporary measures. Perhaps the POD did not believe the requests for replacement, if there were such, as the standard issue seems to have lasted months whereas years were probably expected. Unlike a few other fancy cancels from other post offices, there did not appear to be an effort to make something unique to the post office or postmaster. The 'corks' were utilitarian, in that they did not 'advertise' the name of the post office or clerk, by means of letters or initials. None are fancy enough to be recognized as such.

The obliterated of Calgary are notorious for wear and lack of clarity. Their sometimes unattractiveness is perhaps a reason they are only collected by a few. By nature they are general identifiable by being on cover and by date. This monogram is an attempt to put some order to the identification of the obliterated; this first attempt is by date. This methodology is flawed however, in that it is apparent that two postal clerks were cancelling mail concurrently. The saving grace seems to be that each clerk may have proceeded independently from one another, in that they seem not to have used the others assigned obliterated. It is hoped that by date the range of usage or even new 'cork' will be reported by others.

Another study of the date stamps may help prove a relationship. This may prove difficult in itself as some believe that three broken circle date stamps were at play in the obliterated period (I conjecture only two stamps were issued, each re-cut at least once). The number of date stamp issues needs to be resolved too.

The numbering is tentative, but in the future a Type number might be assigned.
