CHECKLIST OF ALBERTA POSTAL HISTORIES

compiled by Dale Speirs

When I first began considering writing the postal history of Alberta, I did a literature search and found next to nothing. Much of what passes for postal history for any area is not. The following are not genuine postal history:

- 1) Checklists of postmarks. I collect postmarks myself but by themselves they are artifacts, not the actual history of a post office.
- 2) “Here is a cover” stories. Interesting, but only vignettes.
- 3) Social histories of towns illustrated by some covers or stamps. This is the most common type of pseudo-postal history. Long detailed accounts of a settlement but only a paragraph or two about the post office or the people who ran them.

I recently ran into a problem with writing Alberta postal history, that of duplication by others. The May 2016 forest fire which caused the evacuation of Fort McMurray in the Athabasca Tar Sands prompted me to spend several weeks writing a postal history of the area. You can imagine my dismay when I opened the Sep/Oct 2016 issue of CANADIAN PHILATELIST and discovered that David Piercey had beaten me into print on the subject. A fine article, and I hold no grudge. It’s just one of those things.

As a result, this issue of JAPH has a checklist of postal history articles of Alberta already published, the genuine kind, not here-is-a-cover stories, to help others avoid duplication. I would also like to encourage others to let me know what they are working on so as to avoid duplication. Alberta has had over 4,000 post offices and retail postal outlets, so there should be plenty of room for all.

For the most part, I have been concentrating on Alberta south of a line from Rocky Mountain House to Red Deer to Stettler and east to the Saskatchewan border. I have completed the area west of Highway 2 from Olds to the American border, the Mormon diaspora of southwestern Alberta, bits and pieces south of the Trans-Canada Highway, the Red Deer River badlands, and parts of the Eckville-Red Deer-Blackfalds area. I haven’t any plans to do the districts north of Highway 11 or the boreal forest. If someone wants to stake a claim to, for example, the Peace River district, Edmonton, etcetera, I have no problem with that. Please let me know so that I can publish a list in future issues of JAPH.

ALBERTA POSTAL HISTORIES PUBLISHED: Version 2016-11-16

This checklist only includes substantial articles on postal history. Excluded are checklists of postmarks, “Here is a cover” stories, social histories of towns illustrated with a few covers or stamps, and brief notes.
